

Students of Pranvayu Club, LUVAS Conduct Summer Relief Activity for Birds

Hisar, May 21: Students of the Pranvayu Club at Lala Lajpat Rai University of Veterinary and Animal Sciences carried out a compassionate environmental activity by placing waterers and feeders for birds at different locations across the university campus to help them cope with the intense summer heat.

The initiative aimed to provide clean drinking water and food to birds during the scorching summer season, when natural sources often become scarce. Students enthusiastically participated in installing earthen water pots and bird feeders under trees and open spaces frequented by birds.

Faculty members appreciated the efforts of the students and highlighted the importance of wildlife conservation and compassion towards animals and birds, especially during extreme weather conditions. The activity also helped create awareness among students and the local community about protecting urban biodiversity and encouraging eco-friendly practices.

Members of the Pranvayu Club appealed to people to place water bowls and grains outside their homes and workplaces during summer to support birds and other small animals. The programme reflected the university's commitment towards environmental sustainability and animal welfare

